Yale Law School Legal Scholarship Repository

The Yale Law School Legal Scholarship Repository (http://digitalcommons.law.yale.edu/) is our online, open access website containing almost all past and present Yale faculty legal scholarship, as well as a great deal of student scholarship and entire runs of ten former and current Yale law journals. The Repository is recognized as one of the most valuable free portals to legal scholarship available on the Internet. At the Yale Law School, the digital Repository is now treated as the central archive of professors’ work, past and present. It plays a vital role in our preservation efforts for the Law School. As such, it represents the institutional memory of the school’s scholarship.

The Yale Law School Legal Scholarship Repository contains over 8,100 scholarly works, and last month alone, the Repository saw over 90,000 full-text downloads.

Beyond our own community, the Repository enjoys incredible global reach and has become a fabulous tool for global outreach.

One of the new features we’re very excited about is the Readership Activity Map. The map provides a real-time visualization of full-text downloads across the globe. The moment Yale Law School scholarship is downloaded from our Repository, a pin will drop on our Readership Activity Map, showing us what’s being read in real-time. From Sydney to Singapore to Slough to Salt Lake City, if there are people interested in our collection, there are pins on our map to prove it.
