RHONDA BROWN (Editor-in-Chief, Yale Law & Policy Review): We at the Yale Law & Policy Review like to consider ourselves unusual if not unique in our multidisciplinary approach and our focus on contemporary legal issues. This is the first time in recent memory, however, that we have taken ourselves off the printed page and tried to address these issues in a live forum. As a result, there are a number of people I would like to thank because we certainly could not have tried this without their help.

First of all, a special thanks to the Yale Law School and Dean Calabresi and Dean Carroll Stevens, who have been most supportive and helpful in this endeavor, and, in addition, to our moderator, Harold Koh whom you will see throughout the day holding things together and who let us lift liberally from his International Trade course outline to set up our panels and to identify substantive issues. And, of course, our co-sponsors, Covington & Burling and Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld without whom we would not have had the seed money to begin nor the eminently qualified speakers they sent us, Harvey Applebaum and Richard Rivers.

In addition, there are some students I would like to thank particularly at this point because they have spent hours on the telephone, stuffing envelopes, and a whole variety of other enjoyable and occasionally educational tasks. Jeff Meyer, Joe Tsai, Larry Ng, Linda Defendeifer, Barbara Burbach, David Fontaine, Michal Tingle, Kurt Jacobs, and Bill Araiza have all participated tirelessly. The editorial board of the Yale Law & Policy Review, too, who voted last March that they would take on this responsibility in addition to their regular editorial duties, have assisted this project enthusiastically since then.

I am now fortunate to introduce to you Harold Koh, an Associate Professor of Law here at the Law School. He has been an Associate Professor at the Law School since 1985. He teaches International Trade as well as International Business Transactions and Legal Constraints on the Foreign Affairs Power. Professor Koh received an A.B. from Harvard in 1975 and a B.A. from Oxford in 1977. He received his J.D. from Harvard in 1980, where he was Development Editor of the Harvard Law Review. Professor Koh clerked for Judge Malcolm Wilkey of the U.S. Court of Appeals in the D.C. Circuit from 1980 to 1981 and for Justice Harry Blackmun of the U.S. Supreme Court from 1981 to 1982. He was an associate at the law firm of Covington & Burling in Washington, D.C., from 1982 to 1983; then an adjunct professor at the George Washington National Law Center from 1982 to 1985. He served as attorney-advisor for the Department of Justice, Office of Legal Counsel from 1983 to 1985, and then we were lucky enough to get him here.
