Diaper & Wipes Drive,
sponsored by the Working Women’s Network and the Asian Network at Yale, took place this past month. The drive benefited the New Reach, an organization headquartered in New Haven that works to inspire independence for those affected by homelessness and poverty through a continuum of housing and services.

Here is a video of our very own Jordan Jefferson discussing the Working Women's Diaper and Wipes Drive, which she developed, created, and is managing for the third year in a row.

According to the New Reach website, “The third annual diaper and wipe drive sponsored by the WWN Family Network subcommittee and the Asian Network at Yale (ANY) reached more than 30 locations, collected more than 325 boxes of diapers, 50 boxes of wipes, and $250 in online donations for New Reach. This was the first year Two Men and A Truck assisted with the collection of donations and delivery to the New Reach warehouse. It took an entire moving van, two men, and two days to collect all of the donations and deliver them to the community-based charity organization that is the leading provider for those experiencing homelessness or poverty in Connecticut. This awe-inspiring undertaking would not have been possible without the time and effort generously donated by the volunteers who worked on this campaign and the donations made by the many big-hearted members of the Yale community.”

Arctic Law Exhibit

As climate change melts the ice in the Arctic Ocean there will be new opportunities to fish, to drill oil and gas, and to sail across it. This will impact the people living in the Arctic region and risks severe damage to the environment. The UNCLOS Treaty (the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea which came into force in 1994) is the treaty that guides this decision making power and regulatory force to the eight Arctic coastal states. Unfortunately, however, the United States is not a signatory to the Convention. The Treaty sets forth general rules but it is up to the individual state to decide how to best implement them.

Curated by Dan Wade, Curator for Foreign and International Law and Lecturer in Legal Research, the Arctic Law exhibit is on display in the Foreign and International area of the Lillian Goldman Law Library, Level 2.
