'80—George Loomis Sterling died in New York City on August 8. He had been for over twenty-eight years connected with the office of the corporation counsel of the City of New York. For more than twenty years he was recognized as one of the pillars of that office; and was frequently designated to be acting corporation counsel during the absences of the titular corporation counsel, and he exercised, while such designations lasted, all the powers and duties of corporation counsel. He had much to do with the drafting of many of the more important statutes, affecting New York City, that have been enacted of recent years. He wrote certain parts of the Greater New York Charter, and was an acknowledged authority on the interpretation of that instrument. He was counsel for the city in nearly all litigation relating to assessments for local improvements, and was a leading expert in that branch of law.

'81—Allan Wallace Paige, died from appendicitis in Chicago, Ill., on July 27. He had been actively engaged in the practice of his profession since graduation, having been admitted to practice in the state and United States courts in 1881 and in the New York courts in 1885. As general counsel for the Connecticut Railway & Lighting Company, he secured from the State of Connecticut valuable charters for street railway, light, water and gas companies, and these he was able subsequently to merge and dispose of to the New Haven system. In 1882 he represented Bridgeport in the lower house of the general assembly of Connecticut, becoming assistant clerk of the House in 1883, clerk in 1884, and the next year clerk of the Senate. In 1891 he was elected speaker of the house, and in 1905 became a state senator, and in that year was chairman of the judiciary committee.
