In a very special sense, Mr. Justice Cardozo belongs to the American law schools. Free of the bars dividing curricula into "courses," he is a roving professor who teaches in all subjects from the first year through the last. Still more intimate ties bind him to the law schools of Columbia, Harvard and Yale. Each university conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws. His law clerks, during his term as Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, were selected from the three schools in rotation. The editors of the Columbia Law Review, the Harvard Law Review and the Yale Law Journal join in this tribute to their beloved teacher.
